MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 15, 1880.

Fear Dreams.

A Curious Little Story Written Before He Reached Lancaster, by Emil Zola.

The evening shades were falling over a deserted battle-field; the victory was won, and four soldiers camped in a lonely corner were enjoying a tardy meal. Seated on the grass in front of a large fire, before which a few slices of lamb were cooking, the eyes of the youth with a look of hatred, and hastened his step to keep up with him.

"I saw him cut down a branch and make it into a rough club; then he hastened his step, fearing to lose sight of his victim and hiding his weapon behind him.
The young man, who had been resting, rose at his approach, and kissed him on his forehead in welcome.

"They set out once again on their walk.
The day was drawing to a close. The youth followed a narrow, shady path. The young man took the lead, singing gayly and smiling at the beauty all around; now and again he turned to smile on his companion, and the smile made me guess that they were brothers. But the lips and eyes of his companion did not respond; he followed the youth with a look of hatred, and hastened his step to keep up with him.
